POSTER OF RESEARCH

AN ANALYSIS OF POSTFEMINISM THEORY ON CLARESSA SHIELDS CHARACTER IN MOVIE SCRIPT "THE FIRE INSIDE" (2024) BY BARRY JENKINS

Muhammad Lutfil Khaliq (2022130017)

Background of problem

In this movie script, Claressa dreams of being the first woman from the U.S. to win a reputation outside its own shores for her boxing prowess. At this time, though, women participating in boxing were rare that modern times feel some what strange to look back upon 2006 saw strong tags for male boxers There was no record of a female boxer competing for first-ranking laurels on this front despite such restrictions. Claressa devoted herself to qualify for the 2012 Olympics going along with American fighters through qualifying, she took part in boxing matches that year in order just before going for gold . Existing research indicates that postfeminist themes frequently appear in such biopics, including The Fire Inside, yet detailed analyses of how these themes are embedded within narrative logic are still lacking.

Research Method

The research I have use qualitative approach and presented with a descriptive method through an intrinsic approach in the form characterization, plot, and setting, then relates to an extrinsic approach using Postfeminism theory

Formulation Problem

1. How is postfeminism theme portrayed in the characterization of the main character of "The Fire Inside" movie script based on postfeminism theory ?

2. How does the plot and setting of the fire inside movie script build a postfeminism theme?

Objective of research

1. To analyze postfeminism theme portrayed in the characterization of the main character of "The Fire Inside" movie script based on postfeminism theory.

2. To analyze the plot and setting of the fire inside movie script build a postfeminism theme.

Research Finding

This research reveals the representation of postfeminism theory including Individualism, Choice, and Empowerment and Self Surveillance and Discipline in the movie script The Fire Inside (2024) through analysis of intrinsic and extrinsic elements to show the struggle of Claressa to be a first winner in boxing.

Conclusion

This research reveals that the movie script The Fire Inside (2024) represents of the first women is Claressa Shields be a first women in boxing win in Olympics. The Fire Inside exposes the central paradox of postfeminism. On the one hand, Claressa appears as an empowered, independent, and self-sufficient woman. On the other hand, this empowerment demands constant self-surveillance, emotional sacrifice, and extreme bodily discipline. The movie script indirectly reveals that women's freedom within a postfeminist framework is often accompanied by increasingly internalized responsibilities and pressures. In conclusion, The Fire Inside not only celebrates Claressa Shields' achievements as a female boxer but also represents the complexity of women's experiences in postfeminist culture.

Background of Problem

Although feminist and media studies have been widely discussed, scholarly examination of postfeminist features in biographical movie script about female athletes remains limited. In this movie script, Claressa dreams of being the first woman from the U.S. to win a reputation outside its own shores for her boxing prowess. At this time, though, women participating in boxing were rare that modern times feel some what strange to look back upon 2006 saw strong tags for male boxers There was no record of a female boxer competing for first-ranking laurels on this front despite such restrictions, Claressa devoted herself to qualify for the 2012 Olympics going along with American fighters through qualifying, she took part in boxing matches that year in order just before going for gold .

FRAMEWORK OF THE THEORIES

01 Intrinsic Theory

For intrinsic theory approach I have used Petric & Boggs theory through Characterization, Plot, and Setting for analysis this research.

02 Feminism

For the extrinsic approach theory I have used feminism theory especially in postfeminism theory. Individual women came from these relationships angry. And they used that anger as a catalyst for women's liberation.

METHOD OF THE RESEARCH

Kualitatif

According to Creswell (2009:40). In qualitative studies, because of the inductive, evolving methodological design, inquirers may define few terms at the beginning, though may advance tentative definitions. Instead, themes (or perspectives or dimensions) may emerge through the data analysis.

Data Collection Technique

Collecting data is an action that must be completed before conducting this research so that the writer may complete this thesis more easily. The research approach is a paper study. The strategy itself is a method of gathering data using a reading script.

Data Analysis Technique

The data was analyzed using qualitative descriptive technique through discourse approach. I identifies dialog and narrative constructions that reflect the postfeminism by Rosalind Gill ways are individualism, choice, and empowerment, and self-surveillance and discipline and the ideology of postfeminism, which later the results of the analysis will be associated with the theory of postfeminism to provide the value of representation of female characters according in the context.

RESEARCH FINDINGS AND ANALYSIS

Data Analysis

Individualism, Choice, And Empowerment

One aspect of this postfeminist sensibility in media culture is the almost total evacuation of notions of politics or cultural influence. This is seen not only in the relentless personalizing tendencies of news, talk shows and reality TV, but also in the ways in which every aspect of life is refracted through the idea of personal choice and self-determination

Through Characterization, Plot, and Setting

Self Surveillance and Discipline

Something of the intensity and extensiveness of the self surveillance and discipline now normatively required of women can be seen in women's magazines in which bodily shape, size, muscle tone, attire, sexual practice, career, home, finances, etc. are rendered into 'problems' that necessitate ongoing and constant monitoring and labor

Conclusion

In conclusion, The Fire Inside not only celebrates Claressa Shields' achievements as a female boxer but also represents the complexity of women's experiences in postfeminist culture. Through Claressa's main character, the movie script demonstrates that empowerment is not a stable end state, but rather a process continually negotiated through choice, discipline, and self-surveillance. Therefore, the movie script is relevant to read as a cultural text reflecting how postfeminism works to shape modern female subjectivity strong, ambitious, and empowered, yet simultaneously bound by the logic of strict self-control.
